The committee of World Heritage approved the registration of the Causses and Cévennes territory to their world heritage list on 28th June 2011 because it is a living, progressive cultural landscape of Mediterranean agropastoralism. This area of 3023 km² is located in the French departments of Aveyron, Gard, Hérault and Lozère. This exceptional universal value is based on interactions for millenary of combined forces of nature and agropastoralism

- Landscapes of the Causses highlands have been shaped by agropastoralism for three thousand years. In the middle ages, the development of towns around the Mediterranean prairies and particularly the growth of religious institutions have generated the evolution of an agricultural structure based on agropastoralism whose founding principles are still in place today. Too poor to welcome towns, too rich to be deserted, the landscape of Causses and Cévennes is the resultat of the modification of natural environment by the agropastoral system used for one millennium. Causses and Cévennes both represent the different types of pastoral organisation found around the Mediterranean Sea.

This landscape which was built over several milleniums has made Causses and Cévennes a living protected example of European agropastoral patrimony which was indicated by their application on the official website of UNESCO'S World Heritage.

Within this registered territory, the following five towns, Alès, Ganges, Lodève, Mende and Millau, are true gateways to Causses and Cévennes. These towns are very different but they are linked by history and a territory which is classified today.
